

A Mainstream Response

by Miles Mathis

May 27, 2025

After years of receiving heavy fire from me, accelerating since the first of the year, mainstream physics finally ended up in my inbox again, letting me know how it felt about it. I thought you might like to know what mainstream physics had to say to 13,000 pages or 35 volumes of analysis on my science site alone, and how I responded.

In my opinion, your “work” is the product of a diseased mind. I find your continued jealous blathering about other physicists, notably Sabine Hossenfelder, to be symptomatic of a remarkably disturbed, poorly adjusted malcontent with little talent and wildly nonsensical misinterpretations of physical phenomena and theoretical constructs. Unfortunately, if we want a robust internet of things, we have to also accept the fact that it is equally available to miscreants, misogynists and raving lunatics. I wouldn’t have it any other way. Somewhere, there is a web page listing all of the most irrational, noxious, tedious, self-contradictory, quixotic, banal and pointless people on our small planet. There you will finally see your name in lights, recorded for posterity. An eternal numb-nuts. Thanks for making me laugh, Friedrich

That's it verbatim and in full. Ah yes, the devastating and substantial scientific response we all fear from a judge so awesome “he” need not sign with a real name. The return address was also a burner account of course, confirming the bravery on display here. Here was my initial response:

Yes, poor Sabine, she must be feeling really glum these days, along with all her celebrity-fraud colleagues, continuing to be dismantled by me, while watching their careers continue to crumble as physics bites the dust. So glum and powerless they need to sick you, "Friedrich", on me. And who are you really? Her niece, her pool boy, her plastic surgeon? From the sound of it, most likely a pimple-faced boy at university compelled to defend her "honor". You have to laugh. Take your little bag of ad homs and run along, Freddy.

But then I got to thinking what you may already be thinking: could this be Sabine herself? She is sure to include that I am a misogynist, which no man would do, and she signs it Friedrich, a German name. And why “notably Sabine Hossenfelder”? Is Sabine really the most sinned against, supposing I am sinning against the mainstream by not agreeing with it? No. Most would scold me for having the nerve to attack the big dogs like Bohr, Heisenberg, Feynman, Oppenheimer, Turing, Hawking, Gell-Mann, Weinberg, Einstein, Penrose, Kerr, Guth and Newton, and they usually do when they whine about my ego. Sabine doesn't make that list, obviously. So she sort of gives herself away here.

You will say that surely this is beneath her. No one who found me worth responding to would respond to me this way, even anonymously. But you underestimate the power of alcohol. I get these responses pretty often, and they all have the same taste to them. In fact, these are the only responses I get from the mainstream. They reek of desperation and raw undisguised hatred. They are the death-throes chatterings of someone cut down on a battlefield and bleeding out as you stand over them, hoping to land a final weak curse upon you, the one who walked over them and did what they could not. But it didn't land. It never does.