

Watching the Phoenix Burn

In a headline that seems to come out of the Babylon Bee, but isn't, we see Speaker of the House Mike Johnson this week giving a speech at Columbia University against Palestinian protestors. I mentioned this a few days ago, but without reading the actual speech. As it turns out, in that speech he claims that Hamas has cooked Jewish babies in ovens.

No really, he actually said that. Hmmm. Jews in ovens? That rings a bell. I think I may have heard something like that before, though I can't remember where. What could it be?

But there's a problem here: even the Israeli press has admitted it isn't true. It was just made up by Eli Beer, head of Israel's EMS, but there isn't a shred of evidence for it.

That isn't why I am here, though. That is just one lie in a constant stream of them coming from Israel, Ukraine, DC, and the mainstream press in general on all topics. I am here to point out something very obvious that no one else is. The US House just passed an anti-Semitism law that is wildly unconstitutional and is sure to be shot down by the Supreme Court on First Amendment grounds if it passes the Senate. Which it probably won't, since it looks more like the usual bluff. They want you to think it passed so that you will obey it as a law regardless.

[Update: As I predicted, it died immediately in May of 2024, the Senate refusing to even look at it.]

Anyway, in that anti-Semitism law is the provision that you are not allowed to compare Jews or Israel to the Nazis. Well, that is not what I am about to do. I am about to compare the Jews to. . . themselves. Previous Jews. Is that going to be outlawed? You never know.

Because of course this ovens thing has been claimed before. It was claimed the Nazis cooked Jews in ovens in the Holocaust, remember? As you see, I am not comparing Jews to Nazis, I am pointing out their claims now are very similar to their claims then. They seem to like using this idea of people being cooked in ovens, I am not sure why. I guess they were brought up on Hansel and Gretel, I don't know.

But it seems to me Eli Beer wasn't thinking ahead, because he should have seen the damage his false story could do to the Holocaust story. It is EXACTLY the boy crying wolf scenario, isn't it? See if you can follow me here:

- 1) Jews after WWII claim the Nazis cooked them alive in ovens.
- 2) Jews now claim Hamas cooked babies alive in ovens.
- 3) The current story is proved false, and that is admitted by Haaretz.
- 4) Logical people like me make the easy connection, going "Well, if the Jews lied about it last week, then we might ask if they lied it about regarding the Holocaust."

Do you see how that works? I have had people tell me the Jews wouldn't lie about something like that. But they just did.

That is why this is so tragicomic. They are now so full-fathom-five in their own nets they can no longer see the surface. They tell these whopping lies that just sort of explode into their own faces like a loaded cigar, then act surprised when we notice. They need to pass a law that you must believe everyone, no matter what they tell you. If they stand in front of the sun while telling you it is night, well, as long as they have tits or a yarmulke you have to believe it. The only way this could be more absurdist is if they joined the two projects, with the Jews all wearing fake 66 double D's as they swore they had been raped by Trump, Larry Nassar, and the Duke lacrosse team.

Next day: It isn't just Israel or the Speaker of the House or the mainstream press spreading these lies about Jewish babies being cooked in ovens, it is the alternative press as well, including major outlets like the Gateway Pundit. GP is supposed to be a conservative magazine, but today they are promoting a Jewish student at University of Michigan yelling at protestors that they are supporting those who cook Jewish babies in ovens. Yep, they are repeating that ridiculous story and expecting their audience to buy it. I can't say whether they are or not, but I have to doubt it. I suspect this is blowing back on Gateway Pundit. It certainly should. It tells us who is funding them, and proves what I have told you before: they are controlled opposition.

Florida Governor Ron DeSantis has now repeated this outrageous lie, speaking on Wednesday at the University of Florida campus, where he said

You know, I wasn't here after October 7 on the campus; I'm sure the protestors were all very upset at the fact that Hamas went into Israeli communities and baked babies in ovens, raped women, [and] assassinated elderly people in very brutal ways.
